Its fascinating. When you go into a stationery store that they're manufacturing millions of pens; constantly we're all buying them.
I must have bought six thousand Bics in my life. I've used up maybe two of them. Where are the rest of them? When you move the refrigerator there's a couple back there but it doesn't account for it. Where are all the pens? That's why it's so embarrassing if you don't have one. You got a pen?
Can I borrow a pen? We always have to whisper because it's so humiliating. I don't have a pen.
When you move the refrigerator

Buying shoes is one of the great shopping challenges. Have you ever seen someone put on new pair of shoes?
They turn into a zombie as they start walking around the store. Yeah, these are pretty good. Then they have that little 1 -foot-high mirror there. What is that about? So I can see what cats will think of my shoes? What is that angle? Bum passed out on the curb, Hey, what do you think of these? I just got them. I've seen them from that angle myself. Buying shoes is one of the great shopping challenges.
Monkeys are really the end of the line

Of all the places that you go all the time, the dry-cleaning relationship is one of the most bizarre. Because you keep giving each other the same thing, back and forth, over and over again. He gives it to you, you give it to him, he gives it back to you. It's like it's half his shirt, in a way. He has it as much as you do...you oughta go shopping with him. 'What do you think of this shirt?'
'That would look good with a light starch.'
The only warning label people really respect is 'dry-clean only!' Y'know what I mean? Speed limits, lung cancer, cigarette Monkeys are really the end of the line in monkey level of pet ownership, have a kid.

so close. If you need a pet that can roller skate and smoke cigars, it's time to think

Its fascinating. When you go into a stationery store that they're manufacturing millions of pens; constantly we're all buying them. I must have bought six thousand Bics in my life. I've used up maybe two of them. Where are the rest of them? When you move the refrigerator there's a couple back there but it doesn't account for it. Where are all the pens? That's why it's so embarrassing if you don't have one. You got a pen? Can I borrow a pen? We always have to whisper because it's so humiliating. I don't have a pen. When you move the refrigerator

Buying shoes is one of the great shopping challenges. Have you ever seen someone put on new pair of shoes? They turn into a zombie as they start walking around the store. Yeah, these are pretty good. Then they have that little 1 -foot-high mirror there. What is that about? So I can see what cats will think of my shoes? What is that angle? Bum passed out on the curb, Hey, what do you think of these? I just got them. I've seen them from that angle myself. Buying shoes is one of the great shopping challenges. Monkeys are really the end of the line in the pet world. I think when you're at the monkey level of pet ownership, have a kid. I mean, come on, you know, I mean, you're so close. If you need a pet that can roller skate and smoke cigars, it's time to think

Of all the places that you go all the time, the dry-cleaning relationship is one of the most bizarre. Because you keep giving each other the same thing, back and forth, over and over again. He gives it to you, you give it to him, he gives it back to you. It's like it's half his shirt, in a way. He has it as much as you do...you oughta go shopping with him. 'What do you think of this shirt?' 'That would look good with a light starch.' The only warning label people really respect is 'dry-clean only!' Y'know what I mean? Speed limits, lung cancer, cigarette Monkeys are really the end of the line in the pet world. I think when you're at the monkey level of pet ownership, have a kid. I mean, come on, you know, I mean, you're so close. If you need a pet that can roller skate and smoke cigars, it's time to think
